

The lighthouse keeper climbed the narrow stairs before sunrise.

A warm cup of coffee waited beside the old brass telescope.

Ships passed the rocky shoreline while gulls circled overhead.

He wrote careful notes about the weather in a leather journal.

By afternoon the fog had lifted and the harbor turned busy.

Fishing boats returned with silver nets shining in the light.

In the village market, bakers stacked fresh bread on wooden shelves.

Children hurried past carrying kites shaped like orange dragons.

An old musician tuned his violin near the stone fountain.

Travelers exchanged stories about mountain roads and river ferries.

The evening bell rang softly as lanterns began to glow.

Everyone agreed the festival would begin at noon tomorrow.